Mr. Timmons's invention has attracted considerable attenrepresentative in Columbus to look over the invention and that the company has offered him $110,000 for the invention and a royalty on sales besides.

While he was employed as chief engineer of the Hobson shops, Hobson, O., for the K. & M. Railway company, Mr. Timmons claims that he first conceived the idea of the compound air compressing motor to take the place of steam. He experimented and for the past five years has been continually at work on the machine. He has applied for a patent and a search at Washington Onio's law has been in effect for so Mr. Dwight Wright and daugh- has failed to reveal anything like his invention, according to word received from the patent offices.

Mr. Timmons explains the process of the operation of the motor in this way. The air is com- troller.
